ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

With the name of God who gave me the chance, ideas and physical strength in preparing this master’s thesis. Without His guidance and blessing, it would have been more difficult task for me. First and foremost, my utmost thanks to my parents, mum (Tumerah binti Rosmin) and dad (Mohd Bashah bin Babji) for their unconditional love and continuous support throughout the time of writing this thesis. Special thanks to my husband, Adam Soo Kok Chung and sister, Imee Shahnaz for love showered on me. To my dearest kids, Amani, Daanish, Lutfi, Mikael- always believe in yourself, work hard, and there is nothing you cannot accomplish and to my little angel Irfan, I miss you.

I wish to express my sincere appreciation to my supportive supervisor, Mr. Jamaludin Yaakob. This thesis would be less than complete if not for his words of wisdom, guidance and encouragement. I am also very thankful to all the lecturers of Construction Contract Management team for their assistance and motivation to me throughout this program.

My token of appreciation also to my family members, fellow colleagues and classmates, Yani, Jannah, Mazuan and Shikin for their morale support and point of views. I am appreciative of your friendship.
ABSTRACT

By virtue of section 6(4) of the CIPAA 2012, the entire amount is deemed disputed if the non-paying party chooses not to respond to the payment claim. Hence, the non-paying party will not be precluded from challenging the payment claim in the adjudication proceeding even if he has failed to serve a payment response. The stand taken by section 6(4) is conflicting to the jurisdiction of the adjudicator as set out in subsection 27(1), where any dispute is limited to the matter referred to by the parties pursuant to sections 5 and 6. In contrast with the deeming provision provided under section 6(4), the decided CIPAA cases has proven that the interpretation of section 6(4) is rigid and failure to submit payment response will cause the later defence and/or counter-claim in the adjudication response to be estopped. In the application of statutory interpretation, it is critical to note that irrespective of any perspective, it is trite that court must give effect to the statute according to the intent of Parliament. This research intended to identify the proper interpretation of section 6(4) of CIPAA. In achieving the objective of this research, in depth study would be made to understand the application of payment response in other statutory adjudication jurisdictions, the intention of the Parliament and the principle of statutory interpretation, namely the literal, golden and mischief rule (known also as the purposive approach). From the findings, it is pertinent to note that the crux behind the introduction of statutory adjudication exclusively to ensure timely, consistent and prompt payment. Despite section 25 of CIPAA empowers wide ranging authorities to the adjudicator, however an absurdity cannot be the intent of Parliament as the limit of the adjudicator is governed by subsection 27(1) of CIPAA, which clearly circumscribes under payment claim and payment response. As the current CIPAA is adequate to serve the intention of the Parliament, therefore it is highly recommended for section 6(4) to be amended to avoid any ambiguity.
ABSTRAK

Menurut seksyen 6(4) CIPAA 2012, seluruh jumlah disifatkan sebagai dipertikaikan jika pihak yang tidak membayar memilih untuk tidak memberikan respons kepada tuntutan pembayaran. Maka, pihak yang tidak membayar tidak akan dihalangi dari mencabar tuntutan pembayaran dalam prosiding adjudikasi sekalipun telah gagal untuk menyampaikan suatu respons pembayaran. Pendirian diambil oleh seksyen 6(4) bercanggah dengan bidang kuasa adjudicator yang tertakluk kepada subseksyen 27(1), di mana sebarang pertikaian adalah terhad kepada perkara yang dirujuk oleh pihak-pihak menurut seksyen 5 dan 6. Berbeza dengan peruntukan di bawah seksyen 6(4) yang sedia ada, kes-kes CIPAA telah membuktikan bahawa tafsiran seksyen 6(4) adalah tegar dan kegagalan mengemukakan respons pembayaran akan menyebabkan sebarang pembelaan dan / atau tuntutan balas dalam prosing adjudikasi tersebut ditolak. Dalam mentafsir aplikasi undang-undang, adalah kritikal untuk mengambil kira dari setiap sudut perspektif, bahawa undang-undang lapuk telah menetapkan mahkamah untuk mengkehendaki tafsiran suatu akta berdasarkan niat Parlimen. Kajian ini berniat mengenal pasti tafsiran yang sesuai di bawah seksyen 6(4) CIPAA. Dalam mencapai objektif kajian ini, pemahahan secara mendalam dikehendaki bagi memahami pengaplikasian respons pembayaran di dalam bidang kuasa adjudikasi berkanun yang lain, niat Parlimen dan prinsip pentafsiran undang-undang, iaitu kaedah harafiah, keemasan dan kemudaratan (juga dikenali sebagai kaedah tujuan). Adalah dikenalpasti bahawa adjudikasi berkanun secara eksklusif dipertuntukan untuk memastikan pembayaran yang tetap, cepat dan tepat pada masanya. Walaupun seksyen 25 CIPAA memberikan kuasa yang luas kepada adjudikator, namun adalah satu kemustahilan bagi Parlimen untuk beniat sedemikian kerana kuasa adjudikator yang diterhadkan telah tertakluk di bawah subseksyen 27(1) CIPAA, yang dengan jelas menghadkan peruntukan pertikaian hanya melalui tuntutan pembayaran dan respons pembayaran. Oleh kerana tafsiran CIPAA memadai untuk menzahirkan niat Parlimen, adalah disarankan untuk seksyen 6(4) dipinda untuk menghindari apa-apa kemusykilan.

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

1.2 Introduction

According to Eleventh Malaysia Plan, Strategy Paper 18,\(^1\) from 2011 to 2014, 29,435 construction projects were awarded at total value of RM470 billion. The contribution of construction industry is highly recognised as it recorded a double digit average annual growth rate of 11.1% during the Tenth Plan. It is undeniable that construction industry generates wealth, improves quality of life and creates work opportunities for many, which indirectly has multiplier effect on each other segments of the Malaysian economy (Azman, M.N.A. \textit{et al.} (2014)).\(^2\) The following are the few noteworthy construction project projected for 2016:\(^3\)

\(^3\) Ibid
(i) Development cost of RM11 billion for Cyber City Centre in Cyberjaya
(ii) Development costs of RM320 million for Rubber City, Kedah, RM142 million for Samalaju Industrial Park and RM200 million for Palm Oil Jetty in Sandakan;
(iii) RM1.4 billion to improve 700km of roads throughout the country; and
(iv) Various schemes such as PRIMA, MESRA, Rakyat, FELDA, RISDA and PPAIM for 351,500 houses and 66 new primary/secondary schools and colleges.

As evidenced, the Government appreciates the significant of construction sector. In reciprocation, the employer must keep his side of the bargain by effecting timely payment to ensure continuing success of this sector. It is submitted that payment is a crucial issue in the construction industry. According to Lord Denning in the English case of Dawnay Ltd. v. FG Minter Ltd and others, ‘cash flow is life blood of the construction industry’. Similarly, the Malaysian construction industry also experienced significant numbers of payment disputes. Statistics by Martin, R. (2015) revealed that since the enforcement of statutory adjudication in Malaysia, the total value of all payment claims registered was approximately RM330 million. According to Abidin, A. (2007), payment is in the top list of issues in the construction contracts that are referred to the courts.

It is further submitted that Malaysia is not the only country that is troubled by payment difficulty. It appears that other countries are also not spared by the conundrum. As a respond to this major problem, the British Parliament had in 1996 passed a statute called the Housing Grant, Construction and Regeneration Act (“HGCRA”) as a means of speedy determination for construction contract disputes. The success of UK 1996 Act as the first country which made adjudication a statutory summary mechanism to address payment defaults issues has spread to other parts of Commonwealth jurisdictions such as Scotland, Northern Ireland, all states in Australia, New Zealand, Singapore and most recently, Malaysia. The implication of late and non-payment not only cause a serious cash flow problem, but also compel the unpaid party to abandon the project and some were on the brink of bankruptcy (Dancaster, 2008). Unlike other industries, due to the size, duration, complexity and involvement of multiple parties, failure in getting timely payment trigger a chronic and prevalent effect to the entire delivery chain of construction industry (A N Ameer Ali, 2006). In essence, it entails the idea that the parties to a construction contract should 'pay now, argue later.'

While most standard form contracts offer for interim, progress or stage payments, such as clause 42 CIDB and clause 28 PWD Form 203A (rev. 1/2010), however the completion of the whole project or works is commonly a condition precedent in order to receive payment. Therefore, this aspect of adjudication is both significant and critical as a statutory right to interim payments without waiting for the completion of the whole works. This right was very much embraced in the construction industry because the reality was that both main and sub-contractors depended on interim payments for cash flows, both sustainable and sustained as their lifelines. The various states modelled after the UK 1996 Act are as follows:

Statutory Adjudication in Other Countries and Functions (Karib, Shaffii, and Nor, 2008)\(^\text{13}\)

1.2.1 Commencement and Scope of CIPAA

After much debate and discussion involving the relevant governmental bodies, professional organisations and various stakeholders in the industry, the Construction Industry Payment & Adjudication Act 2012 (“CIPAA”) was gazetted by the Malaysian Parliament on 22 June 2012 and finally came into effect on 15 April 2014. Although the Bill took a long time in the making and has been improved prior to the birth, the Act is still not free from criticism. In particular, many are concerned that the outcome of this new legislation would be a claim culture, where the unpaid party would proceed to adjudication on the slightest dispute, causing all time, energy and resources being spent unnecessarily instead of concentrating on concluding the project (Fong, 2012).14

As a prerequisite, an unpaid party who wishes to avail himself to the adjudication process must first serve a payment claim to the non-paying party. The mere service of a payment claim by an unpaid party on the non-paying party does not automatically or immediately give rise to a dispute.

---

16 section 5 of the CIPA Act 2012
17 Collins (Contractors) Ltd v Baltic Quay Management (1994) Ltd [2004] BLR 63
Once the payment response period has expired, written notice of adjudication is served\textsuperscript{18} and as soon as the appointment of an adjudicator is concluded, the claimant is required to serve its written adjudication claim.\textsuperscript{19} In this respect, the claimant is required to serve its written adjudication claim by specifying the nature, description of the dispute, the remedy sought including any supporting documents on the respondent and the adjudicator within 10 working days from the receipt of the acceptance of the appointment by the adjudicator. The respondent is then obliged to serve its written adjudication response within 10 working days from the receipt of the adjudication claim.\textsuperscript{20} Failure to do so would allow the claimant to proceed with the adjudication. Upon receipt of the adjudication response, the claimant may serve its adjudication reply within 5 working days thereof.\textsuperscript{21}

Decision to be delivered within 45 working days from the service of the adjudication response or reply, whichever is later, or 45 days from the expiry of the period prescribed for the adjudication response if no adjudication response is provided. The prescribed time-frames may be prolonged, provided with the agreement of the parties. If the adjudication decision is not furnished within the specified time, that decision will be deemed void.\textsuperscript{22} The entire procedure from the initiation of adjudication process up to the delivery of the adjudicator’s decision will take approximately around 95 to 100 working days.

Despite there is no express provision prohibiting parties from contracting out of the CIPAA, it is obvious that contracting out would be contrary to the public policy and the intention of the Act to alleviate payment problems. It is trite law that freedom to contract is not absolute, instead, it is subject to the statute.\textsuperscript{23}

1.1.2 CIPAA and the Other Statutory Adjudication Regimes

The pertinent differences between CIPAA and the adaptation of other legislations can be identified, amongst others, are as follows:

(a) Scope of dispute: Unlike United Kingdom where all matters in a dispute under a construction contract to be referred to adjudication, including non-payment issues, the statutory regimes in New South Wales, New Zealand, Singapore and Malaysia mainly govern payment disputes only.

(b) Written and/or Oral Contract: Similar to Singapore, the Malaysian statutory adjudication strictly confines to contracts made in writing. Previously, section 107 of the HGCRA is applicable strictly to written construction contract but changes have since been made by Part 8 of the Local Democracy, Economic Development and Construction Act 2009 where the written requirement is now repealed. Australia and New Zealand also followed the footsteps of United Kingdom position and the contract will now relevant to written, oral or a mixture of both.

32 Section 9(c) of the Construction Contracts Act 2002.
(c) Definition of Construction Work: Unlike other jurisdictions, ‘gas, oil and petrochemical’ works are not included nor expressly defined under the scope of ‘construction work’ except in CIPAA.\(^{33}\)

(d) Time to Render Decision: The adjudicator in United Kingdom has 28 days,\(^{34}\) 20 days in New Zealand,\(^{35}\) 14 days in Singapore\(^{36}\) and 10 working days in New South Wales, Australia\(^{37}\) to render a decision. Unlike other jurisdictions, the adjudicator in Malaysia is expected to deliver his decision within forty five (45) days.\(^{38}\)

(e) Jurisdictional Challenge: Unlike the Singapore\(^{39}\) and New South Wales Act, Malaysia took rather unusual approach under section 27(3) of the CIPAA as the adjudicator is permitted not to decide the “jurisdictional challenge” (including the validity of the payment claim and the payment response) but to proceed with and complete the adjudication proceedings despite the jurisdictional challenge.

(f) Setting Aside an Adjudication Decision: Section 15 of CIPAA expressly permits an aggrieved party to submit an application to set aside an adjudication decision at High Court, whereas Singapore, New Zealand and

New South Wales allow a review procedure where the matter can be reargued before another arbitrator.

(g) Retrospective effect: The retrospective effect in CIPAA is not consistent with other jurisdictions. For instance, section 104(6)(a) of UK 1996 Act affirmed that the applicable dispute under the ambit of adjudication process is for construction contracts which are entered into after the commencement of this Act. Similarly, New Zealand,\(^{40}\) Australia\(^{41}\) and Singapore\(^{42}\) also applicable to contract either entered into on or after the enforcement of the Act.

(h) Details in Payment Claim: The statutory provisions in New South Wales, Singapore and New Zealand merely require the unpaid party to provide details to identify the construction contract to which the progress payment relates, whereas CIPAA\(^{43}\) requires the unpaid party to provide details which identify the cause of action to which the payment relates.

(i) Failure to Respond: Section 6(3) of the CIPAA identifies that a payment response shall be served on the unpaid party within ten working days of the receipt of the payment claim. However, under section 6(4), “a non-paying party who fails to respond to a payment claim in the manner provided under this section is deemed to have disputed the entire payment claim”, hence the non-paying party indirectly preserving the right to defend at later stage in the event a payment response is not served.

\(^{40}\) Sections 10 and 11 of the New Zealand Construction Contract Act 2002
\(^{41}\) Building and Construction Industry Security of Payment Act 1999 of New South Wales
\(^{43}\) Section 5(2)(b) of the CIPA Act 2012
On the contrary, sections 14(4) and 15 of the New South Wales Act and section 23(2)(a) of the New Zealand Act specifies particularly that the failure of the non-paying party to serve a response or to pay by due date will enable the unpaid party to recover the sum claimed as a statutory debt. In the United Kingdom, a party to a construction contract may not withhold payment unless he has given an effective notice.

In this respect, upon service of a payment claim pursuant to section 5 of the Act, the non-paying party has two options within ten working days; either:

(a) responding to it within the prescribed time either denying the whole claim or admitting to part of it; or

(b) let the period lapse as a symbol of ‘protest’ to the entire payment claim under section 6(4).

Summary: Similarities and Differences in Statutory Adjudication in Other Jurisdictions
In one perspective, section 6(4) could reduce any potential prejudice if the payment claim tendered by the unpaid party consists of considerable volume of information or just before a long holiday break in order for the other party not to have the time to properly deal with the claim given within the limited statutory time.\(^{48}\)

However, in another perspective, by allowing such flexibility would defeat the main objective of the statute in ensuring prompt payment. The negative aspect of this provision is that it offers an avenue for a tactical gain to the non-paying party to choose not to disclose his justifications for non-payment until at adjudication response\(^{49}\) stage, by which time the unpaid party would only have 5 working days to prepare and submit his adjudication reply.\(^{50}\) Another negative aspect of section 6(4) is that it may also result in instances where the unpaid party will be forced to proceed with the adjudication to which he may not wish to refer in the first place if he had been informed of the grounds for withholding payment through a payment response. This is because, without a payment response, the unpaid party would not be in a position to assess the validity and legitimacy of the reason relied on by the non-paying party for withholding payment and determine whether he should proceed to the next stage by referring the payment dispute to adjudication.

1.1.3 Ambiguity in Section 6(4) as “Judgment in Default”?

Prior to the High Court’s decision in Bina Puri Construction Sdn Bhd v Hing Nyit Enterprise Sdn Bhd,\(^{51}\) WRP Asia Pacific Sdn Bhd v NSBluescope Lysaght Malaysia Sdn Bhd \(^{52}\) and ACFM Engineering & Construction Sdn Bhd v Esstar

Vision Sdn Bhd & Another Case\textsuperscript{53} many are under the impression that if payment response is not filed, by virtue of section 6(4), the entire amount is deemed disputed. In this case, Bina Puri is disputing the interim claims made by Hing Nyit, alleging a gross miscalculation in one of the payment certificates. Hing Nyit therefore issued a payment claim against Bina Puri, who chooses not to respond due to the narrow interpretation of section 6(4) but subsequently filed an adjudication response.

The Court took the view that the jurisdiction of the adjudicator strictly under sections 5 and 6 of the CIPA\textsuperscript{54} and ruled in paragraph 11 of his judgment that “the Adjudicator cannot be faulted for holding that he had no jurisdiction to decide the counterclaim of the applicant that was raised belatedly in the Adjudication Response”\textsuperscript{55}.

The Court further determined that there can be no breach since the adjudicator has referred to the correct law.

As noted above, there are similarities in the adjudication process stage with pleadings under the Civil Procedure. In any litigation process, the plaintiff must serve statement of claim and the defendant is obligated to file memorandum of appearance within 14 days from the service of the claim. Failure to do so can lead a plaintiff to obtain a default judgment against the defendant, for instance if the defendant or his solicitors have failed or neglected to enter an appearance (default of appearance to writ)\textsuperscript{56} or to file his defence (default of pleadings)\textsuperscript{57} which similar to section 27 of CIPAA that strictly set out the adjudicator’s jurisdiction as limited to the matter referred pursuant to sections 5 and 6. It is important to bear in mind that since a default judgment is therefore not a judgment on the merits, hence, in an application to set aside a default judgment, the defendant must submit an affidavit with exhibit of the proposed statement of defence and adduce the relevant evidence to support his case.\textsuperscript{58}

Unlike immediate relief by way of Judgment in Default due to non-appearance, section 6(4) is not recognised as a mechanism to avail the adjudication process. In a plain language, conclusion of such nature would negate the intention of Parliament to expedite payment for unpaid party. Nonetheless, if the matter at hand is complex and involves voluminous documents, would ten working days be adequate to produce suitable payment response?

Given that CIPAA have witnessed four similar issues of ‘payment response’ out of seven registered cases within the first twenty six months, it is vital for this research to identify the central issue and examine the provisions laid in section 6 of CIPAA. In brief, the salient terms highlighted in the said four cases are as follows:

from the adjudication claim, adjudication response or even the adjudication reply.

Paragraph 66 asserted that by virtue of subsection 27(1), the Payment Claim and the Payment Response is to adjudication what pleadings are to civil litigation. Parties are bound by their pleadings under the rules of procedure in civil litigation; in adjudication, those pleadings are to be found in the Payment Claim and the Payment Response; and not in the Adjudication Claim, Adjudication Response or the Adjudication Reply.

Payment Response: Salient Terms of 4 CIPAA Cases

In one perspective, by exercising section 6(4), one is deemed to dispute the entire payment claim, indirectly protecting for non-paying party for not having a default judgment against him. On the other hand, in the absence of a payment response, the unpaid party is only obligated to prove any dispute pursuant to its payment claim without having to substantiate any issue in the payment response.

In contrary to the three cases cited above, in the case of View Esteem Sdn Bhd v Bina Puri Holdings Bhd, there was a payment response however three new additional matters was substantiated later at adjudication response stage. In line with the provisions in section 6(4) where the absence of payment response tantamount to disputing the entire claim, View Esteem therefore alleged its entitlement to rely on these three matters that would be raised for the first time at adjudication response stage. Although such submission was dismissed, it is fundamental to note that there are various underlying issues under the ambit of CIPAA payment response which needed an answer, such as:

(i) Whether the court has given effect of Parliament’s intention and purpose under section 6(4)?

61 Ibid
62 [2015] MLJU 695
63 Section 27 of the CIPA Act 2012
64 Ibid
(ii) Whether the deeming provision in CIPAA should be deleted to eliminate further ambiguity in future?

The cases decision in CIPAA in relation to payment response steers a middle path between those two extremes and it will be interesting to see how it develops in practice, possibly the effect that a non-paying party who failed to submit a payment response is not allowed to raise any cross-claims or set-off as a defence to the payment claim or perhaps section 6(4) of the CIPAA should be deleted to avoid further ambiguity.

Despite the undeniably success in the United Kingdom, the system of statutory adjudication has its problems, primarily because the decisions would give substantive affect and takes away or impairs a vested right acquired under existing laws by creating a new obligations. In this connection, although the powers of an adjudicator is wide, however the limited time imposed against the adjudication participant in CIPAA appears to be somewhat unbalance. The controversy of its feature of being a quick and hurried solution bringing to mind the saying that ‘justice hurried is justice buried’.

1.2 Problem Statement/ Research Issues

It has been an eventful twenty six months since the enforcement of CIPAA and similar to any Acts in its infancy stages, significant developments and updates are constantly forthcoming. In this respect, failure to properly consider the mechanism accurately at an early stage can lead to severe problems if a dispute arises later. Despite following the footsteps of the United Kingdom and other jurisdictions, Malaysian court has remarkably taken a distinct approach in the implementation of CIPAA.

Prior to CIPAA enforcement, Loon, L.W. and Loo, Ivan Y.F. (2013) highlighted at page 104 that the non-paying party will not be precluded from challenging the payment claim in the adjudication proceeding even if he has failed to serve a payment response. The corollary to section 6(4) is that if the non-paying party does not serve a payment response and therefore the non-paying party is deemed to be disputing the entire payment claim. Contradictory to the conclusion made, the predicament in the above cases has proven the interpretation of section 6(4) as rigid and failure to submit payment response may cause the later defence and/or counter-claim in the adjudication response to be estopped.

The flipside of this provision however, is that it provides a tactical advantage to the non-paying party by revealing his response towards the alleged claim only at later stage through adjudication response. It is pertinent to note that once adjudication response is served by the non-paying party, the unpaid party is entitled for short 5 working days only to prepare and submit his adjudication reply to the adjudication response. Another negative aspect of section 6(4) is that it may force the unpaid party to continue the case despite the possibility of solution if the unpaid party is aware of the grounds to withhold payment through a payment response, which not only would save time, costs and resources of both disputing parties.

In an attempt to deliver a quick determination of a dispute, there is this understandable anxiety that careful analysis of evidence and facts may not be achieved in an adjudication process. One reason for these problems is the short timescales and its suitability for more complex technical disputes, for instance in cases where parties demanded more time to present their case fully. On one hand, refusal to hear the entire dispute via adjudication response may tantamount to breach of natural justice.

66 Ibid

Professor John Uff (2005)\textsuperscript{68} commenting that one of the drawbacks of the HCGRA primarily as ‘it may be that the draftsmen assumed that disputes would be tailored to fit the time limit but this has not happened. The result is that Statutory Adjudication is not suitable for all the disputes which are currently being referred, as revealed by the enforcement cases’, being "one size fits all" style.\textsuperscript{69} Thus, the possibility of unjust and erroneous decision is real.

This research would identify and elaborate extensively on the interpretation of ‘payment response’ particularly section 6(4). Due to lack of cases in Malaysia, the decided cases in other legislations in this respect will be scrutinised to ascertain the intention of the Parliament, including but not limited to detecting any loopholes in CIPAA clauses and best way forward.

1.3 Research Objective

This research intended to identify the proper interpretation of section 6(4) of CIPAA.

\textsuperscript{68} Professor John Uff., (2005), UK: 100- Day Arbitration: Is the Construction Industry Ready For It?, Keating Chambers
\textsuperscript{69} Ibid
1.4 Scope of Research

This research primarily will be focused on the interpretation of section 6(4) of CIPAA. In this respect, in depth study would be made to understand the application of payment response in other statutory adjudication jurisdictions, the intention of the Parliament and the principle of statutory interpretation, namely the literal, golden and mischief rule (known also as the purposive approach).

1.5 Significance of Research

Given that section 27 has notoriously confined the jurisdiction of an adjudicator to sections 5 and 6 terms alone, therefore the ‘deeming provision’ obviously immaterial under the CIPAA purview. Significantly, this research shall highlight the repercussions taken by the Malaysian adjudicators in applying the approaches of other jurisdictions, despite the provision is not parallel with CIPAA ‘deeming provision’.

Analysis on relevant decisions of the courts of United Kingdom, New Zealand, Singapore and New South Wales, Australia would provide valuable point of reference as useful guidelines in approaching payment response and the possible problems in CIPAA provisions. With that, one would have better understanding on the limitations and implications of payment response, and subsequently ascertain the need to maintain section 6(4) of the CIPAA.
1.6 Research Methodology

This research is founded by analytical approach based on the decided cases of statutory adjudication in various jurisdictions. A systematic method had been organised to ensure the predetermined objectives is achieved effectively. In this connection, the primary data for this research are clauses in the statutory adjudication as well as law cases related to statutory adjudication and payment disputes. By analysing these cases, possible problems may be discovered, chiefly to provide ideal guideline for future CIPAA to meet the expectation of the construction industry.

The secondary data comprises from analysis and researches done by others such as books, journals, articles, conferences, newspaper commentaries and internet reviews in relation to the CIPAA, as well as the position taken in other jurisdictions pursuant to the statutory adjudication. The objectives can be accomplished through case analysis which will provide a broad overview of the stand taken by the Malaysian in its application of adjudication in construction industry, implications and possible challenges of the implementation. In conclusion, all primary data and secondary data will be analysed in order to fulfill the objective of this research based on the following processes:-

1.6.1 First Stage: Initial Study

Initial study has taken placed prior to identifying of the research topic. In this regard, all inputs from lecturers, fellow colleagues and classmates has played significant role in determining the issues and hindrances of the research topic. Upon the conclusion of the research topic, the objective, scope and hypothesis of the research thereafter summarised in view to formulate an orderly process. The ideas further obtained from the intensive reading of the books, journals, articles and law cases.

1.6.2 Second Stage: Collection and Recording Data

Analysis from the judgment made in law cases in applying the statutory adjudication and comparing between the position taken by Malaysia and other jurisdictions. In this research, sources for literature review comprises from various sources.

Primary data is gathered largely from United Kingdom Law Journal, Malayan Law Journal, Singapore Law Report, Australian Law Report and Construction Law Report. It is collected primarily through the Lexis Legal Research for Academics, LexisNexis Legal Database as well as articles from Googlescholar. To accomplish the objective of this research, keywords such as ‘payment response’ and ‘adjudication decision’ are used to narrow down the scope of findings. Nevertheless, it must be noted that the actual number of relevant court cases are expected to be slightly more than this as some of the cases may not be retrieved from the database search engine of LexisNexis and some of it is yet to be officially reported.

In addition, the secondary source which was collected comprises of latest reading materials from Kuala Lumpur Regional Centre for Arbitration (KLRCA), including but not limited to books, newspaper articles, magazines, research paper executed by third parties and seminar papers. These sources are crucial to complement and complete the literature review chapter.
1.6.3 Third Stage: Data Analysis

Once the related data is collected, all the collected cases, information, ideas, data and opinions will be analysed in order to attain the research findings of the case studies. Following by that, all the background of facts and the court’s decision in other jurisdictions and the relevant cases are explained. The summary of legal cases will be prepared for easy understanding by the reader. Planning and organization of data is transmitted to streamline the process of writing of the paper in systematical order.

1.6.4 Fourth Stage: Writing-Up

The fourth stage of the research is mostly involved the writing-up of the data by way of interpreting, analysing and structuring the research findings. The final stage of the process shall involve identifying any error to ensure the research objective has been achieved flawlessly. Conclusion and recommendations will be made in reliance on to the case analysis.
1.6.5 Fifth Stage: Conclusion and Recommendation

Lastly, the achievement of objectives will be identified. The findings of the study, recommendations and limitations of the study and the topics for further study will be presented. The flow of this research methodology is as follows:

Research Methodology Flow
1.7 Organization of Chapters

This research consists of six chapters. Based on the research methodology, the following are the brief descriptions of each chapter:

- Chapter 1: This chapter presents the overview of the research. It introduces the background of the research, problem statement, objective, scope, significance of the research and method to achieve the objective.

- Chapter 2: This chapter reviews the terminology of payment response in Malaysia and other jurisdictions.

- Chapter 3: This chapter provides the research methodology of this research.

- Chapter 4 This chapter elaborates the significant of section 6(4) and identify the application of statutory Interpretation Acts 1948 and 1967 in order to clarify the ambiguity.

- Chapter 5: This chapter analyse any potential loopholes in the interpretation of CIPAA provisions

- Chapter 6: This chapter concludes the findings and recommendations on the related issues.
1.8 Conclusion

In this chapter, the background of this research has been adequately laid. As described above, under section 6(4), failure to respond to a payment claim shall be deemed as disputing the entire claim. Notably, this provision provides an avenue for a tactical advantage by submitting adjudication response instead of payment response, given the fact that the unpaid party would only have 5 working days to submit his adjudication reply.\(^7^0\)

However the case decided under the ambit of CIPAA is in contrast with the provisions in section 6(4), wherein if the non-paying party failed to serve a payment response it cannot raise positive grounds of defence at the adjudication. Therefore, any reasons it has for refusing to pay the sum claimed must be set out in the payment response if it wishes to rely upon them at adjudication and if no payment response is served, no positive grounds can be raised.

As the intention of this research mainly to determine the significant ambiguity in CIPAA provisions, therefore, the cases pertaining to statutory adjudication in other jurisdictions will be instructive for our courts as source of reference. In summary, one could not help but notice that Malaysia has taken rather unique and peculiar approach since its enforcement. Notwithstanding the variances in the methods of challenging or resisting the enforcement of an adjudication decision, there is common consensus to provide speedy mechanism for settling disputes in construction industry under the statutory adjudication purview. This research will be focused on the terminology of payment response and further recommend the best way moving forward to ensure the effectiveness of CIPAA in operation.
